Billy Brush and Amber Paint were sitting on the workbench in the garage. Amber was a tin of paint, and the colour of the paint inside the tin was amber, a mixture of yellow and orange. Billy Brush looked at Amber Paint and said, 'Let's paint something today'. Amber Paint looked back at Billy Brush, nodded in agreement and said, 'Yes, let's go painting today'. So Amber Paint and Billy Brush held hands and went in search of something to paint.

'Can you see anything to paint? Billy asked Amber. 'No, I can't see anything, and I can't even think what to paint', said Amber. They both walked a little further along and saw Spanner lying on the workbench. 'Can we paint you?' Billy asked Spanner. 'No you cannot', retorted Spanner, 'I am not the kind of thing you paint'. 'Oh! Sorry', said Amber. 'I think we've upset Spanner', added Billy.

Billy Brush and Amber Paint continued to walk until they came to the end of the workbench. 'What shall we do now?' Billy asked Amber. 'I don't know', replied Amber. Billy Brush then looked up and noticed the cupboard hanging on the wall above them. 'Ah ha!' said Billy, 'just what we were looking for, at last, something we can paint'.

The cupboard was in need of paint because it was a long time since it had last been painted. It was a dirty white colour. Billy Brush and Amber Paint became very excited, because they now had a job to do. But, there was a problem. The paint inside Amber's tin was a yellowy, orangey colour, and the cupboard was white. Billy Brush and Amber Paint were concerned and looked at each other in amazement. 'Do you think the cupboard will mind if we painted it amber?' asked Billy. 'I don't know', replied Amber, 'let's do it anyway, it will look good'.
